10. In the space below, briefly describe your experience, qualifications, special areas of expertise, and other reasons why you should be selected a neutral.

I am an adjunct professor at the University of Missouri-Columbia Law School. I teach a business planning course, design dispute resolution exercises for upper-level business classes, and assist with dispute resolution training for practitioners and law students. I am also completing studies for an advanced law degree (LL.M) at the Law School's nationally recognized Center for the Study of Dispute Resolution. The LL.M. Program is designed to provide practicing attorneys and scholars with a comprehensive understanding of theoretical, policy, design and ethical issues related to alternative dispute resolution. As a practicing attorney, I have had many years of experience in negotiating agreements that address the interests of all parties. My experience includes general business and corporate practice at a major New York law firm, service as counsel to a non-profit corporation, and most recently, in-house practice with the US legal department of an international bank. My clients included large corporations, small businesses, and individuals involved in a wide range of transactions. In my last position as in-house counsel, I also gained some experience in employment issues.

I graduated with distinction from the University of Michigan and summa cum laude from The Ohio State University College of Law.
